

The Mayors' Blue Ribbon Commission on Addiction

According to the American Society of Addiction Medicine, drug overdose is the leading cause of accidental death in the U.S., with 52,404 lethal drug overdoses in 2015. Opioid addiction is driving this epidemic with 20,101 overdose deaths related to prescription pain relievers, and 12,990 overdose deaths related to heroin in 2015. In Cass County, the Coroner's Office reported 46 deaths from 2012-2015 because of prescription pain relievers and heroin. In 2016, there were 14 deaths January through July.

The Mayors' Blue Ribbon Commission on Addiction is a local initiative responding to the opioid crisis and the larger issue of addiction in our community. With support from the Dakota Medical Foundation, mayors from Fargo, West Fargo, Horace, Moorhead and Dilworth launched the effort on September 26. In addition to Fargo City Mayor Tim Mahoney, several city departments are involved in the effort.

The core purpose of the commission is to mobilize the community to take back what addiction is stealing. The five-year vision is a strong and healthy community, free from the burden of addiction.

The commission consists of a steering committee, a planning and coordination team, three expert panels and project teams. The steering committee includes champions and ambassadors of the commission who provide expertise and accountability to guide the strategic efforts of the commission.

The planning and coordination team is responsible for providing strategy leadership, management and operations coordination for the commission.

The expert panels provide expertise, awareness of community resources and innovative solutions. They carry out focused action plans to meet measurable goals. There are three panels to address different aspects of drug abuse. They include prevention, early intervention, and treatment and recovery. The prevention panel helps people throughout the community prevent disease and maximize wellness. The vision of the panel is an informed community investing in a culture of addiction prevention. The early intervention panel helps persons at risk improve health through easily accessible, targeted interventions. The panel's vision is a community where people know whom to call. The treatment and recovery panel helps people with substance abuse disorders effectively manage their recovery and wellness. Their vision is a community moving toward no deaths, less incarcerations and people effectively managing their recovery. Project teams were recently formed to work on implementing specific strategies as identified in the commission's emerging strategic recommendations.

The commission released emerging strategic recommendations in December. This included six overarching themes that apply to all three expert panels' priorities:

Framing the problem through data, clear messaging and community readiness.

Reprioritizing funding & reimbursement to grow and sustain programming with proven outcomes.

Fully integrate with healthcare providers.

Build the capacity of organizations to innovate and produce results.

Leverage technology to improve collaboration, awareness, education and access to care.

Improve social capital by moving away from a punitive focus and helping people develop networks of connectedness.

The prevention panel recommended strategies including parent and family-based programs, child/student social capital building, worksite/employee wellness programs, a community-wide public awareness campaign and reducing prescription drug misuse.

The early intervention panel recommended strategies including a clearinghouse of available services and resources, transportation, navigators to help people navigate the system, transitional services to provide safe and sober housing and resources, and implementing or enhancing harm reduction strategies.

The treatment and recovery panel's recommended strategies included medical detox, medication assisted treatment, housing, partnership building, insurance reform and community-based services.

From these strategic recommendations, the planning and coordination team selected four priorities to focus on first. They included a public awareness campaign, a clearinghouse and navigators, medical detox and housing. Soon the project teams will begin working on proposals to implement these priority strategies.

The metro's Spring Cleanup Week in quickly approaching

The metro's annual Cleanup Week will be held May 1-5, 2017. This annual event cleans up our cities by giving residents an opportunity to dispose of tires, appliances and other large items at no charge on their regular garbage collection day. More information is available at www.CleanupWeek.com.

This collection applies to residential homes only and items need to be placed on the boulevard by 7 a.m. on your scheduled garbage day. Residents should place garbage in disposable containers, except for oversized items. When preparing items for disposal, be sure to separate the items into groups (for example, furniture, household garbage, brush, etc.) because items are collected in separate trucks. No building material or concrete is allowed and there is a limit of two appliances per household.

Household hazardous waste products, such as paint, varnish and chemicals, will not be collected during Cleanup Week and should be taken to the HHW facility.

FROM THE POLICE STATION

It is no surprise that parents play a key role in preventing our youth from using illegal substances.

How can you help keep your child from making a poor decision leading down a dark path?

Create an open environment that promotes communication. By offering supportive behavior and being aware of what is happening in your child's life, you may be able to catch the red flags early. Ask questions, listen, observe and maintain control of your emotions.

Encouraging your child often enables your child to be confident in themselves and the decisions they are capable of making. Help your child break down a problem into smaller parts and encourage them to think outside the box to find a solution.

Negotiate solutions with your child. Working together to solve problems helps improve cooperation and teaches them valuable skills they can use in their adult lives.

Show that you care by defining safe boundaries. Make your rules clear and simple to follow.

Have a list of consequences and be ready to hold true to those consequences when your child behaves outside the boundaries set for them.

Be involved in your child's life by monitoring their behavior. Regularly monitoring their behavior will help you recognize problems that are developing and promotes safety. Communicate with your child's friend's parents and their teachers.

Know your child's friends. Know who their friends are, where they live and what type of activities your child will engage in with their friends.

Anyone can become addicted to opiates or any illegal substance. There is no "typical" user and each user looks different from the next. Most parents say, "not my child" but it could be your child.

What are the warning signs?

Missing pills from prescription bottles in the home. If you're prescribed opiate pain killers you should be extra vigilant about storing them out of the reach of children and teens.

Behavioral changes, such as diminished interest in school, extracurricular activities and friends and mood changes or emotional instability.

Indifference or even sleepiness.

Constant requests for money with nothing to show for it.

Needle marks or unseasonable long-sleeved shirts to cover them up. Keep in mind users may use other areas to inject a drug such as their feet, ankles and inner thighs.

Change in personal appearance, such as poor hygiene, red, flushed cheeks or face.

Health issues such as frequent nosebleeds, runny nose not caused by allergies or a cold, frequent sickness, sores or spots around the mouth, nausea, seizures, vomiting, sudden or dramatic weight loss or gain, headaches or sweatiness.

What do you do if you notice one or more of these warning signs?

Get help as soon as possible. Reach out to your child's primary caregiver or local addiction counseling facilities.

For more information on opiate use, abuse and local resources for help, visit www.fargopolice.com.

FROM THE FIREHOUSE

Each year, men, women, and children are killed in home fires caused by cigarettes & other smoking materials. These fires can affect not only the smoker, but others living in or next to the house or apartment at the time of the fire. Annually, these fires cause the loss of life and millions of dollars in property damage.

Put It Out, All the Way, Every Time.

Pinch it, before you pitch it. Whether in an ashtray, or at a smoking station, always make sure your butts are cool to the touch before discarding.

Smoke outside in "designated" areas.

Never use a plastic container for butts. Use deep, sturdy ashtrays placed away from anything that can burn.

Never extinguish directly in trash or upon vegetation. Discard smoking materials in approved non-combustible receptacles.

Use a metal can filled with sand, not planters or pots containing potting soil & peat moss.

Soak cigarette butts and ashes in water before placing them in the trash.

Fully extinguish all smoking materials every time! There are no truly "Fire Safe" cigarettes.

Never smoke near medical oxygen; it can intensify fire, making fires burn hotter and faster.

The City of Fargo receives EPA Brownfields grant

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) awarded the City of Fargo $400,000 in Brownfields grant funds to conduct environmental assessments and identify cleanup needs at several properties targeted for redevelopment and reuse potential.

"EPA Brownfields grants continue to help North Dakota communities transform blighted properties into assets," said EPA Regional Administrator Shaun McGrath. "EPA is proud to be part of Fargo's efforts to address environmental contamination and create new amenities and business opportunities."

The City of Fargo will use the EPA Brownfields funds to assess sites in areas identified as priorities for revitalization, including the Main Street Corridor and the Downtown/Red River Corridor. The City has documented at least 36 sites of potential environmental concern, which include current or former handlers of hazardous waste, known petroleum or hazardous substance spill incident sites and sites with current or former underground storage tanks in the two target areas. Frequent Red River flooding has also made areas of the flood damaged downtown area and land bordering the Red River into potential brownfields as flood waters deposited sediment laden with petroleum, agricultural chemicals and debris.
