The Human Family is excited to share that the North Dakota Human Rights Film and Arts Festival is preparing for its 2018 exhibition. This year, we're proud to announce that the festival has expanded as a touring festival, and will hold screenings and receptions in three cities in North Dakota: Bismarck, Fargo and Grand Forks. This grant application is for costs associated with the Fargo component of the festival.

In Fargo, the film festival will take place over two nights in November, 2018: Thursday, November 15 and Friday, November 16. This year the festival will utilize Theater 1, expanding the number of seats available at the festival to 700 people. Submissions to the film festival began in February, and to date 79 films from 23 countries have been received. Announcements about the films selected to screen at the festival will be made in early October, 2018.

Panel discussions including local human rights and social justice leaders and advocates will take place at the end of each screening. They include:

- Thursday, November 15: To commemorate Hunger and Homelessness Awareness Week, a panel discussion about Homelessness in North Dakota will take place. We have invited Jessica Thomasson, ED of LSSND moderate the discussion. Invitations to participate as a panelist have also been extended to: Cody Schuler, ED of the FM Coalition for Homelessness; George Connell, Professor at Concordia College; Jan Eliasson, ED of the Gladys Ray homeless shelter; Whitney Fear, of Homeless Health; and Jesseca White of the Fargo PD. We may also have a current or former homeless individual to share about their experiences, but that won't be confirmed until closer to the event.
- Friday, November 16: The Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women Crisis. We have invited Michael Yellowbird to moderate an intimate discussion with Lisa Brunner, enrolled member of the White Earth Ojibwe Nation and 2016 Bush Fellow, and B.J. Jones, Director of the Tribal Judicial Institute and Affiliated Faculty at UND's School of Law. Their discussion will educate the audience around the impacts of historical trauma and the roots the MMIW crisis has in colonization - and how that history still impacts women today.

As part of this panel discussion, we are also currently working with artists and will be coordinating an exhibition that will take place in Fargo as part of the film festival (separate from the traveling exhibition, and taking place only in Fargo). We're currently working on engaging the REDress Project, and working with as many downtown businesses as possible to adorn their store-front windows that week with Red Dresses or the like to bring awareness to the MMIW crisis.

The Human Rights Art Festival will be held separately from the film festival in 2018. The art festival is opening in Grand Forks in November, and is expected to come to Fargo in January of 2019. We are currently working with a local art museum as a potential host for the festival (the facility is ADA compliant). Details about the art festival's location in Fargo will be finalized in the coming weeks.

The Fargo Native American Commission branding will be utilized on all materials relating to the festival from approval of the grant through the conclusion of the festival in March of 2019.

Funding provided by the Fargo Native American Commission will be used directly to:

- Offset the cost of an art event such as the REDress Project ($250)
- Offset the cost of travel, room and board for Lisa Brunner and B.J. Jones ($250)

Questions or request for additional information may be directed to Sean Coffman, Executive Director of the Human Family: (701) 205-0248 x101 or sean@human-family.org
